MAGAZINE EDITOR

The Australian Railway Historical Society NSW
Division currently publishes two magazines per month, Australian Railway History and Railway Digest.

As part of our succession planning for the future, there is an opportunity for an editor to join our team to take on the responsibility of Australian Railway History (ARH) magazine. ARH is our flagship magazine, publishing articles of an historical nature using the resources of our substantial archive of photographs and historical documents.

Applicants for the role need not be transport industry 'insiders', but an enquiring mind and a good overall knowledge of the Australian railway scene would be very advantageous. An appreciation for social history and the cultural significance of railways are also highly regarded.

Responsibilities include

- Gathering information and reviewing articles from contributors on rail history
- Page layout design
- Proofreading
- Copywriting
- Planning article publication program
- Determining the direction and emphasis of ARH consistent with the needs of readers and the Society's strategy

The successful candidate will

- have experience in editorial and book/magazine production
- have an eye for detail (essential) and a respect for historical accuracy
- be organised and meet strict deadlines
- have excellent communication skills and a proven ability to coordinate between authors, proofreaders, printers and others involved in the production process.
- be interested in railway operations and in particular its history
- be experienced in the use of Adobe InDesign or similar publishing/graphic design software

All applications should include a covering letter and CV, emailed to the General Manager, Paul Scells at paul.scells@arhnswn.com.au by COB, 31st December 2017.
